

UPENSKILLS

Dajana Musa (26)

You Need to Be Educated and Know How to Use Words

To be competitive in the market, young people need to develop management skills, and from my experience, what young people lack is courage, determination and desire to work. By management skills I mean listening, willingness to cooperate, teamwork and adaptability to the environment. Anyone who wants to engage in entrepreneurship should develop skills such as creativity, diligence and economy. Of course, every entrepreneur should be innovative and educated, and in addition to that he/she should know how to use words.

All of the above will make it easier for young people to position themselves in a market for which there is good institutional support that improves over time, and is mainly youth-oriented.

Since I find it easy to start a company in our country, the area of consulting should only be further improved and more courses should be provided. I myself am at a turning point to establish my own company in the near or distant future because I support the establishing of companies in our country for the development of the economy and for good support for all who are starting.